Rev. James S. Dennis, D.D., an honoured alumnus of the Seminary, generously aided in securing the endowment for this lectureship and gave the first course which was published under the title, Foreign Missions After a Century. He subsequently delivered a course which became the basis of his monumental work Christian Missions and Social Progress. Dr. Dennis set a high standard for this lectureship, which has been continued for twenty five years, and which has not only given instruction to a large body of students, but has contributed to missionary libraries books of the greatest value, embodying the experiences and conclusions of eminent church leaders. In selecting Dr. Charles E. Scott, of China, to serve as the missionary lecturer for the year 1914-15, the Committee was in line with the well-established precedents of excellence. Dr. Scott's services in China as a successful evangelist, as a well-equipped teacher, administrator and church builder; his broad experience and thorough study of present day conditions entitled him to speak with authority on the subjects he selected. The course of lectures as delivered attracted large audiences and was followed with eager attention and evident profit.
