governmental control when, in 1638 it earnestly besought some consideration for this privilege, among the reasons advanced being the declaration that a post-office was really so useful and absolutely necessary. In response to a petition submitted to London during this year, the General Court of the Colony was empowered in 1639 to enact the first American postal law in an ordinance which read as follows: It is ordered that notice be given that Richard Fairbanks, his house in Boston, is the place appointed for all letters which are brought from beyond the seas, or are to be sent thither, to be left with him; and he is to take care that they are to be delivered or sent according to directions; and he shall be allowed for each letter a penny, and he must answer all miscarriages through his own neglect in this kind,...
